Research Ethics Committee has created a monthly seminar series for graduate students, postgraduate students, and research scholars with a purpose of raising awareness about how to initiate a research project, the many considerations to be made while performing a research, and how to publish a relevant research project in an indexed journal. . Research ethics is the application of basic moral ideas to research activities, such as how research is planned and done, how resources and research results are used, how scientific misconduct is handled, and how research is regulated. The sixth lecture series of the seminar series was devoted to “Research metrics”. Research metrics are numbers that are used to judge the quality and importance of the results of research. Metrics are available for use at the level of the journal, the article, and even the researcher. Academicians in today's academic professions are under intense pressure to publish their work in reputable journals in order to advance their careers. Thus, expertise regarding the selection of quality, indexed journals is important and necessary. Hence, the covered topics were highly pertinent concepts associated with measures such as Journal Ranking and Author or Article Ranking. Journal Ranking - Journal Citation Report, Journal Impact Factor, Journal Immediacy Index, Scimago Journal Ranking, Cite Score, and Eigen Factors were among the topics covered. Author or Article rating facilitates the tracking of an individual's scholarly influence in an academic field. Citation Count, H index, G index, and I10 index were only a handful of the factors discussed in article or author rankings. The journal rankings from Q1, Q2, Q3, Q4, and Q5 were discussed.
